

For a highly intellectual person money can't be the most valued / important thing. As people like eating but it is not the main purpose of their lives. Money is the basic need and people like making money, but they should realize that as eating is not the main purpose of healthy people's life similarly, for intellectually healthy people there should be something more valuable than money.

For instance, if an individual is doing a job, he should be doing it with all his dedication and should prioritize his job/work over the money. Money should be kept secondary.
