

The Priority of Purpose ✓

It is impossible for a well-educated, intellectual person to prioritize wealth above all else. While making money can be enjoyable, it should not be the primary objective. Just as a good soldier's main goal is to win battles, not receive pay, or a clergyman's objective is to baptize and preach, not receive payments, a person's focus should be on their work, not financial gain. Fees and payment are secondary to the main mission, and well-trained individuals would prioritize success in their field over financial reward.

main idea is picked and discussed over all content is fine there is no need to explain be precis and to the point word count is essential part of precis need improvement 7/20