"Bashir's family continue collecting charity even after becoming financially stable because they came from poor family, struggling to achieve financial stability but since it became their business, they continue collecting charity, it's not unique some justify it by saying "No business is bad, and no religion is greater than business".

1) To infer the effectiveness of charity distribution in Karachi, transparency is needed about how fund are distributed. Reach to the low level income community. Verification can also be effective.

2) The writer is trying to convey that no business is bad, even if its asking for charity even if one is financial stable as long as it benefit the receiver. The charity distribution is a religion duty which every religion promote

It shows that, for some, financial gain has become more important than ethical or religious values so basically receiving in the name of ~~religion is better business~~

4) Bashirun family might hesitate to stop collecting charity because true dignity lies in self-sufficiency and building one's own identity. ~~Some may feel entitled to charity due to their past hardships~~ Bashirun family might stop because the family owned five plots, bank savings, and ran cars on rent, so this self sufficiency might make them hesitant to stop collecting charity.

5) The Passage suggests the long term impact of unchecked charity practices on society.

- firstly, the unchecked practice wastes the money of the one giving charity
- Secondly, it would not be distributed among the deserving ones.
- Thirdly, it will decrease the spirit of charity among the donors
- In long term society will shape itself into categories. The real ones will be hard to recognize while the self sufficient may get richer.
