The Palestine-Israel conflict has remained questioned and disputed for over seven decades. It's the most complex geopolitical issue in the modern era than any other issue, marked by struggles of genocide, human rights and repeated cycles of violence. Through past few decades, media has played a crucial role in shaping the rights of this issue. From traditional TV news channels to emerging social media accounts that leave no room for injustice acts as a raising voice for Palestinians. However, the role of media does not terminate here, the media has played as a biaring platform, that rapidly spreads mis-informing and targetting selatives through their raised voices. Moreover, the multifaceted role of media can be improved and propose ways to foster more ethical journalism in conflict zones.
