Essay

Aeschylus once said, "In war, truth is the first casualty." Media has the power to form public opinion and influence political and diplomatic actions. In the decades-long Palestine-Israel war, media has been more than just an observer, it has been a battleground for narrative wars. From early print media to the television coverage, media has deeply influenced public perceptions in the Palestine-Israel war. With the advent of social media, the battleground expanded. Citizens from all around the world contribute and contest the narratives in real time. Media and news can be incredibly powerful tools to hold governments accountable, reach the masses with critical information, and open eyes to new perspectives. But in the absence of ethical reporting guidelines, media can be used as a tool of propaganda activities. Media has played an important role in bringing in front of the world the grave human rights violations committed by Israeli army against Palestinians.
