From Public Service to Personal Branding

Civil Service - Between Duty and Display

The Civil Service in Pakistan, once viewed as a noble path of public service, has now become a mix of necessity, obsession, and social prestige. For many, it represents stability, influence, and escape from the insecurity of private jobs. For others, it has turned into an all-consuming pursuit, where aspirants sacrifice personal life and mental well-being in the frantic race for success, often romanticized by coaching centers and social media. In recent years, civil servants have also stepped into the limelight of Instagram and TikTok, blending bureaucracy with lifestyle branding. This has created a hybrid image - half public servant, half influencer - raising questions whether the glamour overshadows the real responsibilities of governance, yet still inspiring youth drawn more to symbols than substance.
