From Public Service to Personal Branding

The Evolving Civil Services

04/20

The civil service in Pakistan, the most prestigious career paths, has evolved overtime. Once seen as public service role is viewed as a ladder to social status and now sometimes a stage for personal branding on social media. The reason behind the craze is job-stability, respects and way out of uncertain private-sector. Formerly, it is a secure and best job in an serene atmosphere. For others, it is not just about careers but about the measurement of self worth. They sacrifice their personal lives, hobbies and even mental health just for self satisfaction, spending on coaching centers and flooding youtube channels. The bureaucrats themselves have shifted from administrative briefings to Instagram and TikTok on social media platform for self promotion. This results strange hybrid, part public servant and part lifestyle influencers. Some argue that these posts inspire youths, critics say that this approach distracts from the tedious work of governance. In this country symbols matter more than substances.
