

The career of civil service has evolved over time from being a public service to a personal branding. This profession is an entry card to access rooms, which are not ^{otherwise} accessible to a layman. It is often regarded as a job which once achieved will resolve all other problems of life, which makes it an obsession. In the modern times of technology and social media, a civil servant is more busy in creating transition reels than transitioning files. The contrast between real and reel makes this profession even more attractive because it inspires the youth in attaining the look of power and the power itself.

Helen Keller expressed a unique desire in her biography that if she were blessed with eyesight for three days, how would she spend her life. she says, on the first day I would like to see the faces of my loved ones, to know how the light of love reflects in their eyes. on the second day, she wants to explore the beauty of the nature for example the rays of sunlight, vegetables on the trees, colors of flowers and the sky blue. on the third day, she wants to experience the liveliness of the world, like the happenings of the markets, lights of theatre and standup comedies. So she can see the creative nature of humans. For her, this gift of three days is enough to transform darkness into light.
