A great world leader, Nelson Mandela stated,

"Education is the most powerful weapon we can use to change the world."

By saying this he conveyed the message that education has power to end all discriminations in the world.

Education is best used to curb gender discrimination

Your introduction is grammatically fine. However, it is not aligned with the asked part because your outline is completely deviated.

It starts with a positive approach when educated parents teach their new generation the concept and fact of gender equality.

Environment in educational institutes and curriculum are also vital in this regard.

Fair economic participation for all genders also becomes Possible because of education. To address this sensitive issue of gender inequality in this contemporary era, religious education also plays vital role. Only education enables a person to be part of politics, administration and judiciary and bring change in the society. It is evident that Education is the most effective tool in achieving gender equality by various ways.

To start with, educated parents comes first who teach their children gender equality. They promote this notion of gender equality not just by words but also by actions. They teach them that all human beings are created equal. Educated parents also avoid gender discrimination in their own family by treating their sons and daughters equally.

will be achieved in a family, which is a positive world too. And it all is possible by educated parents.

All you need is to work on your topic comprehension

Famous actress Jaimia Jamil is children and educate them too to achieve gender equality.

After a home
with educated elders, educational institutes come second to promote gender equality. There is a just and fair
environment for girls, boys and transgenders in all educational institutes which inculcate gender equality in their minds and eventually in the society. As in universities both boys and girls can be class representatives, setting a clear notion of gender equality. This environment plays crucial role in achieving gender equality.

At Third comes the educational curriculum which contains lessons of gender equality. Curriculum contains or involves both curricular and extra curricular activities. This curriculum is made in a way to promote gender equality. The appreciations and recognition of all men, women and transgender achievements are highlighted in textbooks is a good example of this. In this way the curriculum at all educational levels promotes gender equality.

when children learn both religious and worldly education then they become able to understand the true values of religion. The religion itself promotes gender equality. In islamic religion, Allah has mentioned this in Quran and it is interpreted as, "We have created all men and women equal." The basic foundations of islam and many other religions are based on gender equality.

So, religious learning has its own role in promoting gender equality.

All Pakistan Women Association (APWA) which played a great role in gender equality. She was able to do this and bring change, only because she was qualified enough.

The third tier of country or government is Judiciary, which has supreme role in promoting gender education. One can be part of judiciary and bring real change by education only. When women becomes high qualified and become judges, they represent their gender and play crucial role in achieving gender equality. The example in case is Justice Ayesha Malik who declared "the two-finger test" in rape cases as illegal, unconstitutional in Pakistan. She brought this change because of her education.

Then come those people who are highly popular in art and writing like Umera Ahmad and Nimra Ahmad. People follow their narratives. When these people are highly educated they use their sphere of influence by writings and work which promote gender equality. The famous example is of fictional story "The Henna Artist" by Aika Joshi. Such writings by educated and progressive writers have huge role in shaping public perception about gender equality.

when educated people come in entertainment industry they shape public opinion about gender equality. So, education is a tool in all fields to promote gender equality. Priyanka Chopra a famous indian actress and many others use their voice to achieve gender equality by their sphere of influence. Educated actors and actresses play major role in promoting gender equality.

In this era of social media, social media influencers can have huge role in promoting gender equality only if they educated themselves. They can set and breaks norms by their social media influence. Actor

Ameer gilani is not only an actor also a highly qualified lawyer and an instagram influencer, who uses his voice to break gender stereotypes and promote gender equality.

Highly qualified religious scholars have pivotal role in promoting gender equality in society. When rapes, honour killings and other kind of gender apartheid happen these scholars can play their role by interpreting real values of religion. They can crush all kind of gender based religious misconception. People believe them too, because they are qualified and prominent scholars. Nouman

Ali Khan is such a progressive and highly qualified religious scholar who guides muslims and the whole world towards achieving gender equality. Their voices contribute a lot in achieving gender equality.

After having all these precedents set, a time will come when ordinary citizens will become brave enough to break all kind of gender stereotypes. This will happen only when they are educated. They will shatter old norms and set new ones based on gender equality. The point in this case is Jaqueline Pereira, a Brazilian woman who despite being a mother and working in various site jobs, became a mechanic for a large project. This shows the power of education which gives awareness and courage needed to achieve gender equality.

In a nutshell, Education is the best tool to achieve gender equality in the world. Because of power of education people become part of legislatures.
