QUESTION #02

ANSWER:

"The Enduring Trap of Ad Hominem Reasoning"

The ad hominem fallacy involves attacking an opponent personally when one cannot refute their argument. A classical example is seen in the tactic of shifting from addressing the issue (ad rem) to attacking the individual (ad hominem). An anecdote from Lincoln's early legal career illustrates a clever but harmless use of this approach, noticing his opponent's odd back-buttoned shirt, Lincoln subtly played on the jury's prejudices to undermine the lawyer's credibility and win the case. Although this fallacy has ancient roots, dating back to Sophists, it remains widespread and often harmful. While questioning a leader's health, as in the cases of Eisenhower or Roosevelt, may at times be legitimate attacking policies solely because of a leader's physical ~~education~~ condition - as in insults directed at Roosevelt - reflects a malicious misuse of ad hominem reasoning

Translation:

I wish we could play those games again, like many sticks, treasure hunts and puzzles. If those old days could return, we would feel those moments of joy and carefreeness again. We would run around the streets with our friends and forget about the petty quarrels while playing. Those days are now just memories, and the heart often misses those moments, when life was simple, happy and carefree.
