Question NO 3 (A)
Punchions (Passage)

The historian paused, looked directly at the audience and said, "The fall of ancient civilizations cannot be attributed to the single cause. However, we must consider several interconnected factors including environmental degradation, economic instability, and political corruption. Moreover, the notion that there societies simply vanished, is absurd. They transformed, evolved, and, in many cases, their descendants continue to thrive today. When examining primary sources from that era particularly letters, written by merchants, farmers, and government officials. We discover a far more complex narrative than traditional textbooks suggest." Dr. Ahmed, one of the leading scholars in this field, has argued that we must read between the lines to understand what really happened. The evidence, he claims, speaks for itself.

Precis of the passage with title

Precis of the passage

Human societies understood their place in nature through relations with domesticated animals. The human-horse bond shaped all domains and elements of medieval Europe. Master horseman possessed specialized knowledge to read the temperament of the animal through specific bodily signs. They knew suitability of horses for various tasks through bloodlines of horses. Farriers were those horsemen who could diagnose and treat the lameness by watching the walk of horse. They had strange middle position in that society due to skills and services; their workshops were learning centers for youth through observation. Regional philosophies were divided between dominance and mutual respect regarding horsemanship and presented their world views. Valuable horsemen possessed abstract communication with animals which described the compatibility of human will and animal actions.
