Two little frogs were playing about at the edge of a pool when an ox came down to the water to drink, and by accident trod on one of them, and crushed the life out of him. When the old frog missed him, she asked his brother where he was. "He is dead," mother said, the little frog. An enormous big creature with four legs came to our pool this morning and trampled him down in the mud. "Enormous?" "Was he as big as this?" said the frog puffing herself out to look as big as possible. "Oh yes! Much bigger" was the answer. The frog puffed herself out still more. "Was he as big as this?" said she. "Oh yes! yes mother. Much bigger" said the little frog and yet again she puffed and puffed herself out till she was almost as round as a ball as big as she began, but then she burst.

Q7 — Translation

May we be able to play those games like tipcat, search for treasure, napu tapu, and hide and seek. If those days come back we may feel happy and tension-free. we run and laugh in the streets with our friends and forget little skirmishes. Those days are now just a memory. The heart often misses those moments when life was simple, happy and tension-free.

Question #2 — Precis

The History of Fallacy

The ^{use of} fallacy, as a tactic is explained by a scene of British court when the defense lawyer (Lincoln) used it to abuse the opposite lawyer on the direction of his partner to win the argument. The other lawyer, a well experienced person had legal command over the case. He was wearing a new back buttoned styled shirt of that time which Lincoln targeted and used as an argument to convince the jury against his opponent instead of valid arguments. His opponent won the case. The use of misconception seems as old as the history of race and implied order for the nomination of Eisenhower and Franklin Roosevelt whose enemies used it against him by wrongly using a crippled white house policy.
