Question-2Title:- Use Of Fallacy In Court Of Law

The British court of law presents an example of fallacy when a note was handed over to defense lawyer, asking to directly abuse the opponent lawyer, if the case went out of hand. Lincoln used this technique during the beginning of his career when he was losing the case and opponent had fair points. He used ad hominem by highlighting his opponent's back-buttoned shirt, hoping that jury would not be intimidated by his knowledge as he do not even know which side of shirt should be at front. This made him won the case. This fallacy is in use for a long time and may be it was also used by Sophists. The author uses an example of former US President and fallacy against Franklin Roosevelt.
