As the case proceeds, Lincoln's opponent is an experienced lawyer who is seen to win. Lincoln sits down with a gleam in his eyes. He notices his opponent wearing a new shirt which is buttoned up the back. On his turn, Lincoln presents a gentle plea. He asks the jury why his opponent even does not know which side of shirt ought to be in front. Seeing this, the jury decides the case in Lincoln's win. The writer also says that the same fallacy was also used against President Roosevelt's
