mother," said the little frog. "An enormous, big creature with four legs came to our pool this morning and trampled him down in the mud." "Enormous was he? Was he as big as this?" said the frog, puffing herself out to look as big as possible. "Oh yes, much bigger" was the answer. The frog puffed herself out still more. "Was he as big as this?" said she. "Oh yes, yes, mother, much bigger," said the little frog, and yet again she puffed and puffed herself out till she was almost as round as a ball. As big as she began, but then she burst."

Q NO 7

I wish we could play those games again twice, like many other treasures, not just lawful, but further on. If the only days were to return, we would once again gilli danda, treasure hunts, hopscotch and hide-and-seek feel that joy and the innocence of life. We would run and play with our friends in the streets and forget the small quarrels that happened during play. Today, all of that has faded away, and the heart often longs for those moments when life was simple, carefree, and full of happiness.

The Ad Hominem Fallacy: Attacking the Man, Not the Argument

Title: The Ad Hominem Fallacy

06/20

Precis

The ad hominem fallacy involves attacking a person's character to discredit their argument rather than addressing the argument's substance. This tactic, used historically by

Sophists

and in modern politics, is exemplified by an attorney who lacking a case, was advised to abuse his opponents and by Lincoln who won a jury case against a more experienced lawyer by mocking his backward buttoned shirt while sometimes effective in swaying opinion, as in political debates about presidential health, it remains a logical fallacy that shifts focus from issue at hand.
