Title: Human relation with horse - Knowledge,
Power and social bond. X

Precis.

During medieval times, human and horses had represented social cohesion along with pragmatic relation. The acquirement of specialized knowledge for these horse-handling had created jealousy. The master horseman; nevertheless, had understood behaviour of horses so well that he could identify and classify them based on their qualities. However, the most knowledgeable had been farmers, blacksmiths who could craft shoes and identify diseases, and cure them with herbal medicine. Hence, they had special status in the society. Their workshop had become source of information and observation for novice learners. Moreover, the bond between rider and mount had also been crucial. It has resulted in emergence of philosophies. There had been debate on aspects of domination and mutual partnership. However, the most appreciated? had been the one who was able to talk with horse with invisible signs as this leaves ^{the} impression of unity between human will and animal actions.

The historian paused, looked directly at the audience, and said, "The fall of ancient civilizations cannot be attributed to a single cause. However, we must consider several interconnected factors; including environmental degradation, economic instability, and political corruption. Moreover, the notion that these societies simply vanished is absurd. They transformed, evolved, and in many cases their descendants continue to thrive. Today when examining primary sources from that era, particularly letters written by merchant farmers and government officials, we discover a far more complex narrative than traditional textbooks suggest. Dr.

Ahmad, one of the leading scholars in the field had argued that we must read between the lines to understand what really happened. The evidence he claims speaks for itself."
