(Q) - Precis:-

In this passage, a fallacy is explained, the ad hominem fallacy. In which a person attacks the opponent instead of argument. It happened in British courtroom, where a lawyer was advised to abuse the opponent. An example of Abraham Lincoln case, his opponent had strong legal point, Lincoln noticing the lawyer wore a fashionable shirt that button at back. Lincoln cleverly used this to sway the jury. He pointed his opponent, "Despite legal knowledge" did not even know which side of his shirt should be in front. "This humorous attack won the case."

Sentence Structure

This conclude such personal attacks, as criticism of president Roosevelt are long standing but harmful form of argument.
