happiness and carefree moments again. We could have ran along with our friends in the streets, laughed with them and moved on from the small disputes during playing games. Title needs improvement Grammar is ok.

Ad Hominem means to shift focus from the argument itself to the person presenting the argument. It is an effective fallacy. Classic example of this can be seen in a British Court of law scenario. His opponent was an experienced lawyer and had an edge over him legally in the case. Lincoln simply pointed out the mistake in his attire. This led him to win the case. This fallacy is used commonly and is an old one. Critics of the President Eisenhower and Roosevelt used the same strategy.
