Education, once the means of learning, now become major source of pressure for parents and children. Modern education system is highly competitive, as school expecting excellent academic performance, with participation in extracurricular activities and involvement in projects and presentations. Tuition culture is become increasing which also increases academic pressure. This constant pressure leads to increase in stress and anxiety and depression in children. Comparisons with peers also lead to increase in academic pressure in children. As children constantly compared to their peer which fuels their feelings of insecurity. Parents struggle to maintain provide emotional support and fearing that too much leniency may lead to failure. So Academic pressure has become central challenge for the entire household.

Economic stability has become another challenge which is also faced by parents. Rising inflation, high cost of education, expensive healthcare and expensive household. Parents often work for long hours or multiple jobs to cover demands and wants of children and of their own, leaving little time for children. This result in communication gap between children and parents. Financial stress also affect mental well being of parents, who may become irritable, fatigued or emotionally unavailable. Children also experience this tension and may respond with their behavioral issues, ~~as~~ demanding attention in way parent struggle to manage.

Modern Society Present numerous cultural influence that affect parenting. Exposure to global media promote Communism, materialism and lifestyle aspirations that often unrealistic for families. Children become influenced by the fashion trends, celebrities and peer groups, leading to conflict between traditional values and modern desires. Parents find it difficult to maintain discipline because society increasingly advocates for freedom and self expression. Social media trends encourages children to engage in risky behaviour such as early dating or rebellious attitudes. Changes in culture blur the lines between right and wrong, as children received different messages from their social media and social circle. Parents must provide guidance to their ~~peers~~ children and maintain family and society values. This ~~make~~ challenge make parenting more complex.

Children ~~for~~ today face higher rate of mental and emotional stress such as anxiety and depression. These problems arise from academic stress, digital addiction, social pressure and decrease in family bonding. There is decline in outdoor activities and face-to-face communication decreases children's ability to build emotional resilience and social skills. As parents struggle to understand or manage these issues, but they themselves are dealing with this stress. Children may exhibit anger, disobedience, withdrawal or attention seeking behavior, which parent interpret as stubbornness but it is all due to emotional stress. Modern parenting requires greater awareness of mental health, that have never been taught formally.

Parenting is the most important responsibility, yet not receive no formal training or guidance on how to raise their children. As parents are confused between strictness and freedom, some parents become overly protective and controlling. In their sense they are trying to protect their children, while some become too lenient. This inconsistency leads to behavioral instability in children. Confusion about parenting styles whether to adopt modern and traditional approach. Without clear guidance, parents struggle to make good decisions, which increase stress and reduce effective parenting.

To address these challenges, parents should learn how to use digital tools and guide their children. As parents must develop digital literacy to understand and guide their children's online activities. Second, maintaining work-life balance is crucial. Institutions must encourage family-friendly policies that allow parents to spend quality time ~~between~~ with their children.
