In this modern age where children learn to scroll screens even before they learn to speak, the timesters and of parenting is being challenged and reshaped by the forces that in such a manner which no previous generation would have anticipated. Modern times has brought comfort, luxury, technological advancement, and access of information, along with, also comes socio-economic pressures, psychological and emotional challenges, cultural and moral dilemmas, educational challenges, health, and safety concerns and technological challenges. All of these challenges are reshaping the traditional methods of parenting and pushing it towards more sophisticated, emotionally intelligent and well equipped methods of parenting. Modern parents are facing a delicate task of balancing traditional values and evolving modern world. In order to raise resilient, responsible children parents must be well equipped emotionally, literarily, emphatically and technologically.

2 Historical Perspective: Evolution in Parenting.

community based lifestyle worked as society met for the growth of children. Traditionally parents were supposed to teach children the values, morals and way of living in which community based societies also played a major role. Since a child of all ages considered a child of all ages everyone shared an unspoken responsibility of educating the child. Hence the all hands on the deck reduces the burden of parents. Now the families are becoming more progressive and nuclear. The parents alone are sole responsible for the upbringing, growth and development of children. In modern times parents are also various other challenges making them mentally and emotionally fatigued due to which the quality of parenting is challenged. Single parents face such difficulties in their time and well-being more harshly. <sup>rapidly</sup> technological advancements are posing as another sturdier challenge for parents. A shift from strict authoritative parenting is also visible to soft and democratic parenting which reflects global challenges.

3 Technological Challenges

Parents providing mobile phones and screens to their children in order to compensate their <sup>lack of attention</sup> ~~unavailability~~ and <sup>and lack of attention</sup> ~~worries~~ as a ~~very~~ first step on the ladder towards the abyss of screen addiction. Early and excessive usage of screen immensely affects the ~~cognitive~~ growth of children. Excessive use of social media creates unrealistic beauty standards and validation culture in children making them to change themselves as much as they can to fit in those beauty standards. And the inability to achieve such standards to make them contentious and dejected. ~~Unsupervised use of social media might also create problems such as~~ ~~child~~ ~~unable to speak cyberbullying which~~ ~~a child may be finding hard~~ ~~to communicate about.~~ The digital divide between the parents and the children creates a communication and understanding gap. Such divide poses a hurdle for parents in understanding their children. Parents should be update and iterate enough about technological advancement in order to understand protect their children from cyber predators. And also so they can look over it and cautious over the safety and privacy concerns of their children.

Socio-Economic Pressures

The rise in inflation and the increased standards of living have led parents to face economic insecurity. The growing standards of society and the basic necessities also lead to growing expenditure. To cope up with such strain, most families are becoming dual income households. Dual income households are faced with issues such as unavailability for children, heavy work loads and fatigue for parents compromising the quality of life and standard of living for children. To meet the societal expectations the parents would have to pay higher economic costs in such inflation. <sup>costs</sup> The <sup>work hours</sup> cost of education, health care and childcare are enough to break the back of parents.

For single parents the burden is harsher since they have to tackle everything on their own. Migration and urbanisation is also another challenge. The cultural change might also pose a problem in successful parenting. It also leads to nuclear families hence ~~to~~ burdening parents with all of the responsibilities which were previously shared.

Psychological and Emotional Challenges.

The anxiety to meet social expectations and to get their children through out the competitive educational environment ~~is~~ burden on the parents which might lead to various mental issues such as anxiety and stress. Such environment might also lead to various mental disorder in children such as depression, anxiety, identity confusion and others which are usually provoked by their parents and society to meet their expectations and academic validations. These societal expectations might lead to overprotective in which parents becomes more protective of their children while wanting their academic validation and success.
