The ad hominem fallacy ~~wholly~~ works by discrediting the argument and <sup>instead,</sup> attacking the person who constructs the argument. In one of his first jury cases, Lincoln used this fallacy against an experienced lawyer. Despite the fine legal points on his opponent's side, Lincoln won the case merely by attacking the ~~unfamiliar~~ way his competitor wore his shirt. This fallacy is universal and has been <sup>around</sup> used since the past. Historical incidents of its use include attack on President Eisenhower's health in 1956. Such tactics divert attention from substantive issues to irrelevant personal traits. ~~nominations~~ and on Franklin Roosevelt's government policy in 1944.
