4 Conclusion

Women empowerment is a key component of socio-economic development and in achieving gender equality. However, women empowerment is not a privilege that can be gifted to women; rather, it is a right that must be earned through collective efforts and individual struggles.

Empowered women can lift their families out of poverty and can make their decisions, building confidence and self-esteem. Empowered women can play a vital role in the progress of a country. Moreover empowered women can contribute to peace and stability.

Women are facing discrimination in education, employment and other areas. In Patriarchal societies, women are being oppressed and mistreated. Male dominated societies suppress women emotionally and economically.

Women are being violated physically, emotionally, sexually and economically. This violence shapes women timid and shy. Such women cannot perform any part to make a nation stable.

The government plays a crucial role in creating policies for women empowerment. Government can enact laws that protect women's right. Government can develop a national women's policy that outlines the country's vision for promoting women empowerment. These policies should be observed with reference to implementation. Active participation of women should be made compulsory in all fields to make women realise that they are as worthy as man.

Education system must be able to provide women with a sense of working and struggling. Women must realize that they have to work to earn their status in society, it cannot be gifted. Education is such a weapon that can change the destiny, so women should be educated and they should be taught their own worth (rights and duties).

Media shapes attitudes and perceptions about women's rights, influencing public opinion and promoting social change. It amplifies women's voices, promoting their participation in public discourse and decision-making. It portrays strong, independent and empowered women, providing positive role models.

Empowerment of women is a major concern of a progressive society. In male dominated societies, women are suffering a lot of barriers regarding self-grooming and freedom. Government policies, education and individual's awareness is demolishing all such practices to make women empower. Hence, women empowerment can be earned by adopting and accepting women's worth in real meanings of the words.
