Part-II

Q No 2

Précis: (130 words)

The future oratory is unpredictable as the word "orator" has lost its usage. It is only used at moments when people try to transfer this task to another by mentioning them as better orators. In past the art of oration had great acknowledgement, which greatered its practice. However, in present it has lost its value. It is not praised at the level ~~it was~~ ^{now} as it was praised in past. Technological advancements in print and media has increased number of public speakers, eventually decreasing the worth of this art. The last benchmarks of oration were delivered by Winston Churchill, who portrayed this great traditional art for over five decades. His huge collection of speeches have become examples for the contemporary people and will make him remembered as a great orator.

Translation:

The best fragrance of world is not hidden in any garden, but it is found in the happiness of heart. Most of time we try to find it in our precious things, but the reality is that the true happiness is always found in core of our hearts. This joy is not in the high standards of life, but it is in the moment- when we satisfy our soul by achieving success. ~~Usually~~ We always try to find happiness in our greater achievements, by ignoring the little moments of happiness in our life. But when we listen to our heart, we find that the real happiness is in those things which we mostly achieve ~~easily~~ in ease.
