Intro Paragraph

When referencing the topic of gender oppression, one may often be drawn into a debate on how it affects women. However, what many seem not to devote any attention to is the gender oppression experienced by men. Societal expectations are those expectations that shape how individuals are perceived and treated, often confining them to predefined roles. For men, these expectations dictate that they must be strong, stoic, and dominant, placing immense pressure on them to conform. Gender oppression refers to the systemic imbalance of power and restrictions placed on individuals based on their gender, impacting their mental health, relationships, and personal growth. This topic is critical because addressing societal expectations on men is essential to creating a more equitable and balanced society. These rigid norms not only harm men but also reinforce patriarchal systems that perpetuate inequality across genders. Understanding the ways societal expectations on men contribute to gender oppression sheds light on how these norms harm everyone, highlighting the need for solutions to dismantle these harmful constructs. This essay argues that societal expectations on men reinforce gender oppression by perpetuating stereotypes, suppressing emotional expression, and upholding power imbalances, but provocative measures, including redefining masculinity, can help alleviate these issues and create a more inclusive society.

One of the main societal expectations placed upon men is the pressure to be the sole provider. In 2022, a Pew Research study revealed that 78% of men felt obligated to provide financially for their families, compared to only 34% of women. This disparity underscores the enduring perception that men's primary value lies in their ability to earn and support, often at the expense of their personal aspirations and mental health. This expectation limits men's ability to pursue caregiving or nurturing roles, which are often dismissed as "unmanly". As a result, traditional family dynamics are perpetuated, with men confined to breadwinning while women are disproportionately expected to manage the home and care for children. This division not only reinforces rigid gender roles but also marginalizes men who may wish to take on non-traditional roles, such as stay-at-home parenting or caregiving for elderly family members. Further, studies show that men who fail to meet these financial expectations often experience feelings of inadequacy, depression, and social isolation. The pressure to be the sole provider thus not only harms men but also upholds a patriarchal framework that prevents families from exploring more equitable and flexible dynamics.
