The blind devotion in a society change the whole course of a society by the domination of cult leaders, political regimes and societal manipulations. Blind devotion is often dangerous as it causes social, political and religious manipulation and unrest in a society. However, the consequences can be mitigated through fostering education that promotes critical thinking and cultivating a culture of skepticism and independence of thoughts. Hence, without critical thinking, proper education, personal growth and promotion of empathy and tolerance towards other groups could mitigate the consequences related to blind devotion.

Blind devotion is dangerous in many ways. One of the reasons blind devotion is dangerous is its social implications on society. Firstly, the practice of honor killing is most prevalent in the countries that are underdeveloped. In Pakistan the practice of honor killing is often related to social conformity. In many parts of Pakistan, specially in rural areas or conservative areas, honor is considered as the key element of family's reputation and social standings. And women are the main victims of this practice. The popular case of Gandeel Baloch illustrate the example of honor killing that is related to social conformity. Gandeel Baloch was Pakistani model, actress and feminist activist. She was first Pakistani social media celebrity who got fame through social media. She belonged to the rural area of Punjab. As, ~~the~~ Gandeel Baloch got recognition through social media in 2013, when she auditioned for Pakistani singing ~~song~~ competition.

But later this recognition became the cause of her death. Her brother in the name of honor killed her in July 2016 at the age of 26. He claimed that Gandhi brought shame to the family working in the showbiz industry. Thus, due to social conformity and satisfying the societal influence honor killing became prevalent in the society.

Second social implication of blind devotion is its potential to encourage people in a mass murder-suicide practice. The Jonestown massacre is a classical example of blind devotion in a social context that led to the tragic deaths of over 900 people. The members of People's Temple, a religious cult led by Jim Jones, blindly followed his teachings and divine leadership led to a mass murder-suicide. John manipulated his followers into a mass suicide by cyanide poisoning in the remote settlement of Jonestown, Guyana. The followers of the Jones were so devoted to him that followed his teachings till death with questioning. They didn't question their leader about his intentions and true nature of the act. This tragedy illustrates the social implications of blind devotion that followers of Jim Jones did not question about the act and put themselves to death.

Third social implication of blind devotion is the eruption of civil war between ethnic ~~war~~ groups. The extreme ethnic ideologies of two or more groups could lead to war between them. The Rwandan genocide was indeed driven by extreme ethnic ideologies and blind social devotion to the Hutu majority's perceived loyalty and superiority over the Tutsi minority. The Hutu-led government along with their extremist group used Propaganda to dehumanize the Tutsi population portraying them as a threat to the political power and safety of the Hutu people. This created an atmosphere of intense fear and hatred, which led to the massacre of approximately 800,000 Tutsis and few Hutus over a period of 100 days. Social pressures particularly the manipulation of ethnic loyalty played a significant role in encouraging people to turn on their neighbors, friends and even family members. This genocide highlights how social ideologies and loyalty, when manipulated by power structures, can lead to catastrophic consequences.

Conclusion:

Blind devotion is considered dangerous as it causes social, political and religious manipulations and unrest in a society. However, the consequence can be mitigated through fostering education that promotes critical thinking and cultivating a culture of skepticism and independence of thoughts. As we have seen in the history ~~so~~ about that blind devotion could foster social unrest, Political totalitarian regimes and religious extremism.
