Q.No. 1

Precis:

Sportmanship is a stable disposition that influence behavior in sports embodying virtues like fairness, self control, courage and persistence. It involves treating others with respect maintaining self-control, and balancing four key elements: good form the will to win, equity and fairness. Conflicts may arise when the desire to win overshadowed fairness, leading individuals to neglect core sportmanship principles. In today's competitive culture, especially at elite levels, the focus on winning diminishes the importance of sportmanship.

Athletes serve as role models and their behavior sets the standard for others. Poor sportmanship manifests as cheating or under sportman like conduct with sore losses blaming others for defeats and bad winners gloating over victories. Such behaviors can demoralize opponents emphasizing the need for respect and integrity in sports to foster a positive environment. Ultimately, true sportmanship requires a commitment to fairness and ethical conduct in all competitive situations.

rather than ensuring accuracy. This prioritization leads to the spread of misinformation and disinformation and making it difficult for the public to differentiate between credible facts and misleading information.

As a result, sensationalism reporting can create a confused audience that struggles to navigate through distorted narratives.

II. Answer:

The media's framing often simplifies complex issues into binary viewpoints which can hinder public understanding. By reducing multifaceted topics to oversimplified narratives individuals find it challenging to grasp the nuances involved. This oversimplification can lead to misunderstandings and an incomplete perspective on important issues as people may not engage with the full complexity of the subject matter.

III. Answer:

The 24/7 news cycle inundates individuals with a constant stream of information leading to information overload. This overwhelming influx can result in cognitive fatigue reducing people's ability to critically analyze and process the information effectively. Consequently, individuals may struggle to discern credible sources from unreliable ones further contributing to confusion and a lack of thoughtful engagement with the news.
