Politicians, those who are saviours of decency and morality astonish one with their scholarly talks and dodging. In the arena of democracy, their verbal gymnastics form an exaggerated narrative. When out faced with basic questions, respected leaders tend to trap the people in their long syllable speech and convoluted jargon, leaving one in a maze of vagueness. Similarly, one cannot help but talk about their sham promises which fade away at the storm of elections. One shows pay tribute to their dramatics from getting teary eyes to becoming vexed on injustices in the society, no opportunity is wasted and all this keeps the audience hooked. It would be an abrogation not to commend their mastery in manipulating political milieu in their favour. However, it is important to remember that leadership is about serving the right cause not popular agenda.

Ultimately, leadership in politics is more about perfecting the art of performance than genuinely serving the people.
