Indian perspectives-

India view Jammu and Kashmir as their integral part of country. They intended to integrate the region in Article 370 in 2019 to.

Pakistani perspectives-

Pakistan think that Kashmir belong to them as their muslim-majority. They want plebiscite as per the UN resolutions.

Kashmiri perspectives

Kashmiris have different perspectives. Some of them want to be part of India, some of Pakistan And other's are nationalist who want's an independent region with self government.

Prospects for Possible Solutions-

- Change in Indian Government.
- Bilateral talks.
- Mediation International.
- Public Sentiment.
- Independent state.

* Change in Indian Government-

A shift in Indian government can open a bilateral doors, especially if the BJP's hardline policies are replaced. It can result in more moderate stance upon Kashmir.

* Bilateral Talks-

Both the countries should put their self-stances aside and dive into bilateral talks by finding a midway to solve this issue.

Leave a line space between headings for neatness

* International Mediations-

International mediation can work so well, As UN in the past helped to ceasefire if any Country or organization like SAARC helps intervene, problem can be solved by agreeing on their stance.

* Public Sentiment/ Plebiscites-

It should be kept in mind that to whom problem is concerned, their opinion should be kept in mind. Kashmiris should be given an option of what they want.

* Independent States-

This can only be achieved if Pakistan and India compromise and let Jammu and Kashmir an independent state.

Conclusions-

In a nutshell, Kashmir has always been a major dispute between India and Pakistan. But, this can be resolved by bilateral talks, compromised stance and other ways. Furthermore, if both the countries sort out their conflicts. Pakistan and India can work progressive and have better relations.
