Modern Civilization: An Outward Rise, An Inward Collapse

In every era, civilizations evolved themselves in progress from the outside but under this surface, there is something silently decaying.
Today's world is obsessed with fast life style, innovation and endless desires. This has created a society where material gain is considered more important than inner values. Once, the scale of values was character but now it's money. Even the institutions that were supposed to protect morality are now focused on material success, which resulted in a society where trust is broken, institutions are corrupt and even intellect is being used for greed. Moral qualities are now got replaced with materialistic things. People today are focused on gaining wealth, but they do not look within. In this kind of environment, money is considered superior than character. Thus, if people do not return to moral values, all this so-called progress will just be for
