Title: Role of Wealth in Shaping Civilization

Civilizations rarely make both internal as well as external progress. Their internal and external nature damage their conscience. People of crystal palace not notice the poverty around them. For them men's character has no value without being wealthy. Homes, learning tribunals are unable to sustain themselves. They exchange their respect for money. In conference room skills are measured on the basis of wealth. One has this shift results mistrust between neighbours and institutions. Intellectuals also inclined toward money not insightfulness. Those deeply associated with conscience are now greedy, that showed loss of self-accountability. Wealth is considered mystic that results lack of spirit, more comfort but less fulfillment. Return of moral sensibility is essential to restore hollow humanity enjoying darkness of his prosperity.
