The Essay

Michael Faraday introduced Kekulé's structure of Benzene by seeing in a dream. He saw snakes holding their tails in their mouths which led to the discovery of Benzene, which is one of the most important molecules in Organic Chemistry. Dreams are the signs from the Universe in giving ideas and relaxing the mind. Dreams and reality are just a bit far away; this distance can be minimized by focusing on goals without giving up. Furthermore, persistent behaviour with self-confidence is another key to turning dreams into reality. The phrase "if you can dream it you can do it" encapsulates the power of ambition and the
