

Century of Materialistic Benefits

In every epoch, civilizations have progressed themselves in exterior not in internal progress. The modern world is intoxicated with speed, inventions and multiple desires such as glasses and steel rise. It is the greatest reversal, the scales of value, once weighted in character and honoured, have been replaced with material favours. The sanctuary of the home, customs and the tribunal of learning, now stand compromised, abundance their dignity for the gleamy material advantage. In boardrooms, stratagems are now measured by profit rather than fairness; in the power, policy bows the wealth; in human dealings, currency of benefit is often considered affection. The fracture of trust between people, the ultimate degrade once built to enoble. The conscience striving for balance, honesty and humility, which are dismissed and replaced by material benefits. The upcoming new century, with this mechanism, has taught man to reach outward and grasp, but not to work on his inner self. In such environment, wealth becomes the only oracle and character becomes beggar. Unless moral values interrupt this ceaseless materialistic systems, the splendour of our progress will rarely enlighten the world.
