In every epoch, civilizations have progress themselves in exterior not in internal progress. The modern world is intoxicated with speed, inventions and multiple desires ^{such as} ~~such as~~ ^{avoid examples} glasses and steel rise ^{and}. It is the greatest reversal, the scales of value, once weighted in character and honoured, have been replaced with material favours. The sanctuary of the home, customs and the tribunal of learning, now stand compromised, abundance of their dignity for the gleamy material advantage. In boardrooms, stratagems are now measured by profit rather than fairness; in the power, policy bows the wealth; in human dealings, currency of benefit is often considered affection. The fracture of trust between people, & ultimate oracle once built to enoble. The conscience striving for balance, honesty and humility, which are dismissed and replaced by material benefits. The ^{Avoid cutting/overwriting} upcoming new century, with these this mechanism, has taught man to reach outward and grasp, but not to work on his inner self. In such environment, wealth becomes the only oracle and character becomes beggar. Unless moral values interrupt this silent ~~reassess~~ materialistic systems, the splendour of our progress will rarely enlighten the world.
