06/20

Despite material advancement, modern civilization suffers a profound moral decay. The pursuit of wealth and rapid innovation has eclipsed conscience, replacing virtues like integrity and humility with greed and self-interest. Institutions once rooted in moral authority; home, education, religion, have traded their essence for superficial gains. Success is now measured by profit not principle, and even personal relationships are tainted by utility. While outward luxury grows, inner fulfillment withers. This invasion of values fosters distrust, weakens noble institutions and starves the soul. Without a revival of moral awareness, humanity risks becoming a hollow shell, dazzling in appearance but weakened in spirit.
