While holding a bat in his hands, he was dreaming of playing for his national team - India.

He worked for it tirelessly, and today the world knows him as

G.O.A.T - Sachin Tendulkar. The

Don't mention it first and foremost step to achieve something is to dream about that.

Every scientific invention, every revolution, and every law was once just a dream. For example, the independence of nation was once a dream. Similarly, there was a dream of equality behind civil rights revolution. Moreover, justice, economic rise, and bringing revolution in the field of science were also a dream once. Apart from these, it's the dream of victory that can win you matches from impossible situations, and dream of flying that can take humanity to the skies. All these and some other points ~~prove that if someone can~~ dream about anything, he will achieve it - if he worked for it with patience, dedication, and consistency. Dreams are not delusions - they are foundations of reality. So, if you can dream it, and dare to pursue it, you can absolutely achieve it.

Your own thoughts are missing.

~~If a nation can dream~~
~~of freedom, it can achieve independence.~~

~~Before the 20th century, colonialism~~ was at its peak, and most of the countries were colonized by either Britain or France. Pakistan was, too, colonized by Britain. Allama Muhammad Iqbal, was the man who dreamt of a separate homeland for Muslims and planted that dream in the heart of Jinnah. Jinnah worked for it, but it was not a piece of cake.
 He faced British imperial resistance,

Congress dominance, Hindu-Muslim riots, and limited resources. Despite odd situations, he remained motivated and dedicated. Because of his efforts, Pakistan emerged on August 14, 1947. Hence, a collective dream, rooted in ideology, can break the shackles of imperialism.

You are just providing me the information which is not the asked part Further, if a preacher can dream of equality, it can inspire a civil rights revolution. During the 20th century, there was racial inequality in the United States. Blacks were treated harshly, as if they were not human. A black guy, whose name was "Martin Luther King Jr." dreamt of racial equality and integrated United States. He gave an iconic speech, "I have a dream...." He faced FBI surveillance, death threats, and many other challenges, but he stood firm.

It was his efforts to achieve that dream of equality due to which Civil Rights Act (1964) and Voting Rights Act (1965) was granted to Blacks. Hence, a dream repeated with courage becomes a movement; a movement becomes change.

Furthermore, if a prisoner can dream of justice, he can transform a nation. In the 1900's, South Africa was an apartheid state, colonized by Britain. A South African citizen - Nelson Mandela, dreamt about a democratic South Africa. He decided to challenge the system because he had to achieve his dream. He was labelled as a terrorist, exiled from politics, and prisoned for 27 years. Despite all these challenges, he kept dreaming and never stopped the required efforts. His efforts were rewarded with the desired fruit, as he became South Africa's first Black president in 1994, peacefully ended apartheid. Thus, dreams even don't die in prison.

Apart from these, if an economist can dream of rising nation, he can reform its economy. In the 1990s, Indian economy was at the verge of collapse, but Dr. Manmohan Singh dreamt of making India one of the largest economies. In order to achieve this dream, he decided to liberalize economy. He had to overcome political opposition and economic orthodoxy, but he never lost his hope because he had to achieve his dream. He introduced economic reforms that opened India's markets and enabled sustained growth. His dream has been achieved as India is the 4th largest economy of the world. So, if you can dream it, you can achieve it.

Similarly, if a woman can dream of unseen forces, she can change the future of science. Marie Curie dreamt about scientific discovery by understanding invisible forces of nature. She was first female scientist in a male-dominated world. She had to work in cold and underfunded laboratories, but she never gave up because she had a dream. She achieved her dream by discovering radium and polonium—radioactive elements. Moreover, she became first woman Nobel laureate and only person to win Nobel in two sciences. She proved that gender, poverty, and obscurity are not the obstacles of the way—if you can dream it, you can achieve it.

In addition to these, if a child laborer can dream of freedom, he can shake the world's conscience. In the third world countries, child labor is a common thing because of poverty. In Pakistan, a young boy of 10 years was abducted and forced to work. His name was Iqbal Masih. Iqbal dreamt of freedom and decided to free other children too. He escaped a carpet factory and became an outspoken activist at great personal risk. Iqbal helped almost 3000+ children before being murdered at the age of 12. He is a symbol of determination. He proved that even a child can dream big enough to scare industries and shake global conscience.

Moreover, if a poor boy can dream of civil service, he can top the toughest exam. Like CSS in Pakistan, India has UPSC - one of the toughest exam in the world. A boy named Manoj Kumar who was born into deep poverty dreamt of becoming IPS officer. He studied under streetlights, faced hunger, and social neglect. Despite odd situations, he continued his journey to pursue his dream. After some failed attempts, he cracked UPSC with All India Rank 1 and became a national inspiration. Manoj's journey has been filmed by Bollywood. Manoj proved that success does not need money, but a dream with consistency and dedication.

Not only that, if a failed inventor can dream of light, he can brighten the world. Thomas Edison once dreamt about inventing a light bulb that could last long and be commercially viable. As he had to achieve his dream, he started making prototypes. Unfortunately, over 1000+ prototypes failed. Moreover, he had been ridiculed by public and faced financial constraint, but there was a dream. His dream led him to invent the modern electric bulb that changed daily life worldwide. Edison has proved that when there is a will, ^{then} there is way and if you can dream it, you can achieve it.

Likewise, if two brothers can dream of flying, they can take humanity to the skies. In 1903, two brothers, who worked as bicycle mechanics, saw a flying bird. They dreamt that humans could fly like birds. Logic said no, science doubted, but dreamers made it real. During the journey, Wright brothers faced scientific ridicule, mechanical failures, and above all no formal education in Physics. Despite all odds, they powered first flight in 1903 and triggered the modern aviation era. They dreamt about flying, and they made it happen.

Besides, if a batsman can dream of victory in chaos, he can deliver a miracle. The Indian batsman - Virat Kohli, is known as chase master. Pakistan was destined to win the T20 match of 2022 World T20 Cup against India. India was 31-4 while chasing 160 against the fierce bowling line up. Virat dreamt of winning this match, but to everyone else in the stadium it felt impossible. Despite pressure, he scored unbeatable 82* against arch rivals and proved everyone wrong by winning the match. He proved that belief and dream under pressure can turn collapse into glory.

As well, if a humanitarian can dream of compassion, he can build an umpire of care. Abdul Sattar Edhi, the founder of Edhi Foundation, dreamt to serve humanity regardless of gender, class, or religion. He had to face immense challenges like lack of funding, religious criticism, and threats. He stood tall and built Pakistan's largest charity network. Edhi Foundation has the Asia's largest ambulance service. Edhi Foundation was a dream of Mr. Abdul Sattar Edhi that has been fulfilled.

Since then, Edhi Foundation is helping a lot of people across Pakistan - from infants to old ones.

In the same vein, if a deaf blind girl can dream of expression, she can change the way the world sees ability. There was a girl, whose name was Hellen Keller, who had a dream to learn, express, and contribute. Unfortunately, Hellen was blind and deaf, but she had a dream in her mind. She lived in silence and darkness, but she was determined about her dream. Hellen learned to speak, graduated from college, wrote books, and gave speeches. She did not let her disability to become the obstacle in her way to achieve her dream. She proved that even the senses are powerless against a dreaming mind.

To sum up everything, it can be said that if one can dream something—and dare to act on it—one can definitely achieve it. Dreams are not fantasy—they are blueprints. However, dreaming is just the start, it requires faith, discipline, consistency, and dedication to make it real. History is full of examples that speak loudly that everything one can see today was once just a dream. It was a dream of economic glory, freedom from the shackles of oppressed ones. Similarly, it was a dream to crack that one toughest exam or brighten the world. Apart from these, it was a dream to build an umpire of care or break the barriers of disability. All these things were once just a dream, and those dreamers worked on these by full dedication, consistency, and patience - otherwise those dreams die somewhere in their initial phase. They have proved that human progress begins with a spark of dream. Therefore, one should dream boldly, act fearlessly, and watch the impossible turn real.
