Translated Passage

04

Margaret, an elderly woman who used to visit London's Embankment train station every day just to hear her late husband Oswald Lawrence's voice in "Mind the Gap" announcement. This announcement was recorded in 1970s, after Oswald's death, Margaret found comfort in hearing his voice. In 2012, when the recording was replaced with an electronic recording, Margaret contacted Transport for London. When the institution learned about her emotions, they restored her husband's voice at Embankment Station. Now, everyday, the announcement is heard in that same loving voice.

Q#02: moral decay in modern times

Precis and Title

Title: Progress without Purpose

03

Across history, societies have worn the mask of progress but their inner moral decline often goes unseen. Today's world, driven by speed, invention and endless desire, put wealth above values. Towering buildings and markets impress the eye but are empty from inside. The institutions like homes, schools and places of worship once meant to uphold conscience, now chase material gain. Relationships are shaped by self-interest and success is measured in profit, not principle. Trust fades away, institutions weaken and intellect is used more for gain than wisdom.
