TITLE: TRAITS OF NOBLE MEN

A literate and noble man does not make money the central aim of his life. Just like healthy people care about their meals, but are not solely motivated by them. Similarly, while mentally healthy people enjoy making money, it does not overshadow their purpose. A good soldier fights to win battles, not just get paid for them. Clergymen preach god's word to serve, not to earn a salary. Doctors have a mission to heal the sick and needy, not just earn fees. In all professions, purpose of the work comes first, and compensation, though important, always remains secondary.
