

A Thing of Beauty is a joy forever:

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever" is the opening line of "Endymion", the famous poem of John Keats. A thing of beauty is a constant source of pleasure and it never dies. A beautiful object fills the heart with joy and delight. Beauty can be found in any object of nature either in living and non living form. Such as a rose seen for ten minutes gives pleasure and delight for only ten minutes but whenever we remembered about it, its pleasure and delight will become twenty fold.

Any gift from a loved one no matter how small or insignificant it maybe - is full of beauty for the recipient. A small task completed by a person with hard labour and work is full of beauty for that person. A child's first spoken words or his first step holds incomparable beauty for the parents. A beginner's first painting no matter how faulty is full of beauty for the beginner as well as his teacher.

The beauty here lies in the feelings hidden behind a task completed and not the task itself. The sincere efforts made in order to accomplish and achieve something

Comprise of the beauty which of course becomes a joy forever.

If we learn to see the beauty hidden behind everything in our lives, we will gradually reach the highest realms of truth. There is a beauty even behind a sigh, a tear or a sorrow. There is beauty not only in the roses but also in the thorns
