

Definition of empowerment → challenges
→ many questions

Women Empowerment

Women empowerment refers to the process of enabling women to have equal rights, opportunities and power in all aspects of life including, education, employment and social status etc. It is crucial for development of society as when a woman will be educated, she is going to educate her kids. A philosopher once said: "If you educate a woman, you educate a nation". Other than that, Women are working in diverse fields like politics, medicine, engineering and schools. This shows that Women are as capable as men. As compared to the past, now women are more empowered.

but still there are many challenges. Women face harassment, violence, honour killing, unequal opportunities, discrimination, and disinheritance etc. The recent tragic murder of 17-year-old TikTok star Sana Yousaf in Islamabad underscores the dangers faced by women who show their independence and visibility in public spheres. This incident highlights the urgent need for societal change to protect and empower women. It is very important for a fair and successful society. Women empowerment in truest sense means giving rights to women not just on paper but also in real life. It means supporting them in health, education, and decision-making.

True empowerment is when women can take part in every aspect of life without fear or pressure. When we trust and support women, they become strong, independent and confident. In return, they help make whole nation better. Women empowerment is not just a slogan, it is a duty we all must take seriously.