

ESSAY: Women Empowerment Paragraph (250 words)

Women Empowerment is an essential concept to achieve national prosperity. In other words, ensuring women empowerment makes the nations prosperous in the world. Women Empowerment refers to granting women equal rights and opportunities across legal, educational, professional, health, economic, and political domains. When nations treat women on par with men, they emerge (and) as developed nations in the world. Nordic countries, for example, have robust legal frameworks and comprehensive policies to ensure women's rights. Women in these nations enjoy rights to work, vote, education, equal pay, political participation, paid maternity leave, and effective healthcare. Therefore, in the World Economic Forum's Global Gender Gap Report 2024, Iceland ranked 1st with a 93.5% gender parity score, followed by Finland, Norway, and Sweden, respectively. As a result, these countries are included in the world's top economies as well. On the other hand, nations that neglect women empowerment face stagnation. In such nations, women are not provided with equal rights and opportunities in legal, professional, health, political, economic, and socials. Even if there are laws to ensure women empowerment, they are ineffective due to inefficient policies that lack implementation. Women in these countries, therefore, are subjected to various forms of discrimination and violence. The inability of the governments to ensure women's protection and empowerment makes the women's gender vulnerable. For example, in countries, like Pakistan where government is unable to ensure robust implementation of effective laws and policies for women empowerment, the situation is very alarming. Pakistan ranked 145th out of 146 countries on the World Economic Forum Report for Gender Index. This shows that Women Empowerment ensures national prosperity and development.
