

WOMEN EMPOWERMENT

Although, women make half of the world population yet they are deprived from the essential/basic needs of life. In addition to, they did not have access to primary education and healthy life. According to World Bank Report, percentage of working women in South Africa is very low. Education is the key for women growth and development. So, Government should make education free of costs in schools and colleges. Moreover, develop technology for online access to education and lessen infrastructure and social economic barriers. In addition, government should provide health facilities by introducing take home ration surveys and support programmes. Furthermore, develop job opportunities in social sectors so, everyone gets opportunity for prosperous future. Moreover, reducing work harassment by encouraging them for complaints. In this way, women will get empowered mentally, socially and become prosperous in all aspects.
