

Women Empowerment

"As women achieve power, the barriers will fall." said by Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Women ^{empowerment} rejects giving freedom to women in making their own life choices and decisions. A society is not able to fully accomplish its progress, unless, the women in that society is yet empowered.

Western world has made women empowered long before years ago. Unfortunately, the women in developing countries are still seen struggling aiming to address their issues and give them their fundamental, constitutional as well as religious rights.

In developing countries like Pakistan women are deprived from their legal and legitimate rights. They are socially, economically and politically ^{as well} cornered. Women are not entitled in today's ~~great~~ modern world with right to marriage. They are ~~repaired~~ with certain educational fields, if given, then not allowed, by their loved ones due to societal pressure to become a professionally active and ~~basic~~ economically independent. In politics, women's role is more than adverse one can expect. Firstly, in many areas throughout the country, especially, in rural areas women cannot cast the vote. Secondly, they are discouraged through certain immoral means to become a contestant in elections. Despite the fact that, women population in the country is more than 50 percent. Resultantly, voting turnout is ^{seemingly} minimum and ^{representative} number of women in parliament is compromised.

In conclusion, the result can be attained, that empowering a woman is the only option for progress in society whether it would be social, economical or political. However, women empowerment is the need of an hour and let them decide what is right for them, ~~for~~ ^{and let} ~~they~~ ^{with} choices over them, eradicate their ^{excessive} interdependency over man.
