

Women empowerment : 250 words

Women empowerment means making women capable of recognizing their worth in a society where they are neither appreciated nor valued. Throughout the centuries, women have been portrayed weak, vulnerable, and dependent, by society. But after feminist movements in west the perception about women has evolved. They have started casting votes, taking parts in politics—in short they have marked their place in every walk of life from space to technology, from medicine to teaching, etc. No society can progress if they are not giving equal rights to them.

as to the men. Women have proved themselves no less valuable as compared to men. Frailty is no less the name attached to women. They have broken the gender norms that have been perpetuated since many centuries.
But in third world countries like Pakistan women are still being subjugated by men and society.
Society still associate nurturing and doing household chores only to women.
There is a great need to empower women in this part of the world. Organizations like UN must work towards this cause. Educating women is the most powerful tool to empower them; ~~so that they~~ to make them stand out, so that they can recognize their legal rights, their rights to live, right to make their own decisions which would bring harmony and prosperity in a society. An educated woman plays a great role in the development

DATE: _____

DAY: _____

and future of her children. There is a famous quote by an author, "Give me educated mother; I'll give you educated nation."

Empowering women is also essential in a sense that it gives women financial freedom which makes them very strong as she does not have to fulfill illogical demands of society just to make ends meet. ~~that is~~