

Women Empowerment

Women empowerment refers to the process of granting equal rights, opportunities and resources to women in each sphere of life. Women should be given equal rights of education, ~~and~~ employment, healthcare and political participation. Moreover, women should be protected from domestic violence and harassment. So, she could live in a society fearlessly and peacefully. The security of women is a rising concern in ~~our~~ society. Recently, it has declared that the percentage of rape cases is more in Islamabad than other cities of Pakistan. On the other hand, empowerment is not merely about legal rights; it is about changing mindsets ~~and~~ of ~~a~~ patriarchal society which has historically kept women subordinate. Because of this patriarchal issue, most of girls especially in rural areas are devoid of education and job opportunities. So, it is very important to empower women to make decision and lead independent lives. To empower women, educating girls, ensuring equal job opportunities, protecting women from violence, and increasing their representation in leadership roles are crucial steps. Besides having power in society, women should also hold authority in the home, where their decisions should be respected.

Empowering women at the domestic level is essential because the home is the foundation of every society. Respecting women's voices at home cultivates mutual respect, shared responsibility, and stronger family bonds and eventually it leads to built confidence in women to actively participate in broader social and economic roles. In conclusion, when women are empowered, they contribute more effectively to economy and promote social harmony. A truly empowered society is one where gender equality is not just a goal but a lived reality.
