

Question #01

Translation:

History is flaught with successful people who started their lives in extreme difficult circumstances but later on they were remembered as among the world's most successful and famous personalities. Success, respect and reputation don't come easy except wealth provided that your (ansect)^x ancestors are left with enough money to pass it to you. Although you can buy worldly pleasures, happiness cannot. Sometimes, it takes human several centuries to earn honour^{and} a fraction of a minute to lose it or to be controversial.
