

History is full of people who began their lives in difficult circumstances but eventually became well known and respected.

Success, honor and popularity are not served on a plate. Only wealth might be inherited from one's elders. While money can buy material comforts, it cannot buy true happiness. Some people spend decades earning respect and building wealth, and maintaining that success is often even more challenging.

This is not the essence of the passage

Properly translated what exactly in the passage