Punctuated paragraph:

It was almost midnight when the young scholar returned to his rooms. He had left them in a state of revolt. Piles of books lay like islands in a turbulent sea, papers fluttered on the floor as if impatient to be read and on the desk, a single lamp burned its halo warming. A photograph of his grandmother which seemed to smile even in such disorder. "Who would have thought? She once peddled tales to children in the village," he wondered, "Would she have laughed at his neat theories written now in the margins of a book."

~~John greeted Sara while she was buried in her books.~~ John greeted Sara and upon seeing that she was still buried in her books, he invited her to join them for a little walk along the river, so that she could take a little rest. She told him that she wished that she could join them, but the examination was looming over her head, and every moment felt precious to her. Upon hearing this, John exclaimed with sorrow that examinations stole all the joy of ~~joy~~ youth. He further added that he could not comprehend how she endured such constant pressure. Sara replied him that it was not merely the examination that she worked for, but the discipline and knowledge that comes with sincere study. John reminded her that life is not all book and seriousness and a weary mind grows dull and unproductive. Sara agreed with him, but she also believed that temporary weariness was a small price for the satisfaction of achieving one had set his heart upon.
