Question No: 01 (A)

Translation

When world strong economies brought world economic system under their interest, so economic sovereignty remained as a dream for developing countries. International Economic Institutions impose such conditions on the provision of debts which further push the indebted country for more dependency rather than ensuring sustainable economic progress. This act has given birth to a new form colonialism, where weapons of rulers are not gun, but currency, interest and market. Today, the biggest challenge for international community is that they build up such a balance between development and sovereignty which do not rely their national interests on international pressure.
