TEST - 2

Q1 TRANSLATION

(A) When the powerful economies of the world made the global economic system subservient to their interests, achieving economic independence became just a dream for developing countries. International financial institutions, under the guise of loans, impose harsh conditions on debtor countries. So much so that instead of achieving sustainable development, their economies are pushed into further ruin. This practice has produced a new system of colonialism, in which the tools for control are not guns but currencies, interest, and markets. Today, the greatest challenge for the international community is to strike a balance between development and economic independence, making sure that national interests do not succumb to international pressure.

(B) Whenever modern technology has made life easier, it has simultaneously raised questions about personal freedoms and dignity. In this age of digital surveillance, the information of every citizen is being stored in some sort of database. Subsequently, governments and corporations are turning this endless resource into power with which it can influence human behavior. If this situation is not brought under legal and ethical supervision, then a person in the future may be free, but his freedom would
