PART-II

Q.3

Q1- The phrase "time diseases" shows that these illnesses come from the same source, ✓ modern lifestyle. They may affect different parts of the body or mind, but all are caused by the pressures and habits of our era: fast living, constant noise, stress, and overwork. Calling them "time diseases" links them to the conditions of the time rather than to random or unrelated causes, implying a shared origin in the modern way of living.

4

Q2- Modern man suffers because he tries to adjust himself to a fast-paced and technical environment that overwhelms both his body and mind. His disconnection from any higher moral or spiritual grounding creates restlessness and anxiety. Work becomes exhausting instead of meaningful, and relationships weaken as he begins to see people as irritants. Thus, he suffers from the world around him, from others, from his work, and even from himself. In short, the demands of modern life clash with human limits, leading to widespread mental and physical strain.

Q.3- To overcome these problems, in modern times, man needs to restore balance by reducing overwork and avoid constant pressure. Taking time to slow down, maintaining a consistent routine, and ensuring the body receives adequate rest can help prevent exhaustion.

4 Reconnecting with moral or spiritual values can provide inner peace and help individuals face difficulties with calmness. Additionally, fostering healthy relationships and practicing patience toward others can alleviate emotional stress. Together, these measures can mitigate the pressures of modern life and promote a healthier, more stable existence.

Q.4- The last sentence says modern life is becoming "pathological" because it is ruled by two opposite urges: fear of life and lust for life. People are both anxious about living and 4 greedy for its pleasures. This conflict pulls a person in different directions and breaks inner harmony. As a result, a person becomes divided or inconsistent in behaviour and feelings, a "splitting of personality." In other words, the contradictions of modern society damage mental balance and lead to psychological instability.

Translation

✓ Literature is not merely a play of words, but a mirror to human experiences and emotions. When a poet or a writer picks up a pen, he portrays his era and leaves a mark for future generation. Our great poets, such as Ghalib, Iqbal, and Faiz, did not just compose verses; rather, they encapsulated the very soul of an entire civilization into words. Sadly, today's generation is moving away from books and lost in the glitter of social media. If we do not keep our literary heritage alive, we risk losing our identity. Only literature serves as a bridge connecting the past, present, and future. It is therefore imperative that we foster a love for reading among youth and introduce them to our great writers and poets so that they remain connected to their roots.

Q.2

Title :

London: A Place of Equal Society

5

Basis :

A true equal society exists only in London, where people are judged on their intellect, wit, and manners, rather than by wealth, property or social standing. In other regions of England, personal merit is often overshadowed by wealth, family lineage, and social influence, resulting in either servility or arrogance in social interactions. In London, society treats every person equally rather than wealth, status, or position. While the country side may offer solitude, only London permits genuine equality, ~~and~~ independence of expression, and recognition of personal merit without financial backing. This highlights London's unique role in fostering an equal and merit-based society.
